Multi-subject readings and discussions in a writing course, as short as 10 weeks or even 15 weeks, do not enable students to gain much in-depth subject matter knowledge over the time-span of the course. Looking at that curriculum now, I would not alter any of the analytic pre-writing exercises that were aimed at teaching key concepts to facilitate transfer of learning to other writing contexts.

TheEndofCompositionStudies.Herfirstbook,WritingintheRealWorld: I summarize them briefly here: She did not name the multiple discourse communities represented in those readings—literary journalism, environmental ethics, and public policy, among . Both are fine genres for their particular discourse communities, but outside the theme needs to be broad enough to enable a broad range of related intellectual inquiries and needs to be developmentally appropriate.
