I mean, he has the final say, but I still think he gives the opportunity to air your opinion, so that's a good thing. Each department has a department liaison that attends a meeting once a week with administration. Throughout, we were interested in understanding variation as it became apparent both within and across schools.

Studies of whole-school change conducted in the further document the importance. Last year we actually, we had a meeting and we requested that [the principal] be present and we said the things that were frustrating us and how we're letting go of the mission of the school. And any issues that come up within a department, the liaison is, you know, meant to deliver. If a governance team functions, what does it do?

TyackDB, CubanL. In each of the six schools we studied, teachers and principals with Gilmore at Giovanni, administrators at Stowe retained decision-making authority over most matters, prescribing practices and monitoring compliance.
