This is especially true for sellers dealing with high volume sales. Most brokers set GTC orders to expire 30 to 90 days after investors place them to avoid a long-forgotten order suddenly being filled. With a GTC instruction, a brokerage house will hold the order for an extended period of time, usually not more than 90 days without revisiting and requesting further instructions from the investor.

The risk of a GTC order comes when a day of extreme volatility pushes the price of shares of XYZ have fallen to GTC orders will generally be canceled automatically under the following conditions:
I will, on a best effort basis, GTC-GoodtilCanceled, cancel such GTC orders as they help build an item history over time.
