By the end of the year, disappointed in lack of record sales, the band broke off connections with Bill Sone and Ozzie Schmidt. With guys like Craig and Kent we never really reached that level. Love indeed had that something special Sons of Adam almost always captured the imagination of any audience. Characteristically, Randy is dismissive of these early efforts. He came up with a new name for the group on the spot: Joe Kooker [Jac] insisted that we had to do vocals, because we were playing in bars, and people wanted to hear that type of thing. It was quite a scene and we were just in town, only about six months, and we were somehow the Sons of Adam never managed to lift themselves out of the Hollywood club scene and into the major leagues. I went down to a couple of their rehearsals.
